LUSK'S LURID LOVE

As it Shone Forth in the Letters He Used to Write His Inamorata.

THEY TELL A TALE OF PASSION

Than Which Naught Could Possibly be More Tenderly Intense.

HE WANTED HER TO MUSS HIS COLLAR. and Warned Her to Beware of Snakes and Charm ing Hotel Beaux.

Old love letters read in court. The hand that wrote them is still in death, but that detracts nothing from their fervor. Jennie Stoner, who says she's Jennie Lusk, gives some of of Mr. A. P. Lusk's tender missives to the world, while trying to obtain onethird of the residue of the estate of said deceased Lusk. The epistolary correspondence in the celebrated "Baby Bunting" and "Bunny" case was not more tender than

SEPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH. HARRISBURG, January 7 .- Some of the love letters which A. P. Lusk, a prominent citizen of this city, who died nearly a year and a half ago, wrote to Jennie Stoner, who claims to be his widow, were read to-day before the auditors appointed to distribute the estate of the deceased. Mr. Lusk died worth about $90,-000, of which $40,000 have been apportioned to different relatives mentioned in the will of Mr. Lusk. Miss Stoner (or Mrs. Lusk) claims one-third of the amount not distributed, and through counsel on Saturday asked to be permitted to testify as to her marriage with Lusk. The auditors to-day decided that she was not a competent wit-ness, because of self-interest, to which an exception was taken. Among the letters read was the following, written in 1880 or

How would you like to be smothered in fors and held closely in a pair of coatsleeves with somebody's arms in them to keep you warm and prevent your tumbling out and hurt yourself in case of an upset? Shall I answer for you? If so, I would at once exclaim loudly: Muchly, dearly, and sweetly. It has been so long since I have enjoyed a sleigh ride that I don't believe that I would be hardly a safe person to take charge of this nice package wrapped up in furs with nothing visible to the naked eye but two sparkling eyes, looking all kinds of sweet mischief and childlike innocence. I must quit this strain, or else you will come to the conclusion that I should have some one appointed by the court to take charge of my business, as it shows a tendency of softness of the brain, which I didn't want done or take place.

HOPED SHE WOULD BRACE UP. On September 7 Lusk said in a letter:

On September 7 Lusk said in a letter:

I hope the bracing mountain air, pure milk, and sweet country bread will build you up strong and hearty, and you will return with an overflow of spirits and, if possible, more love and affection to lavish on those who are so fond of you, and for a little advice gratis. You must be careful not to exert yourself in your mountain ramble, as it is rest you must need. I would also call your attention to the danger of poisonous snakes that are sometimes to be found in the mountains, and the charm of the domestic nephew of the hotel. I didn't know of any other dangerous things to call your attention to, to avoid at this time.

The writer also naked the lady whom he

The writer also asked the lady whom he addressed to make arrangements for his coming at the hotel at which she was stop-ping in the mountains. On September 13, 1881, Mr. Lusk wrote as follows, in re-sponse to a letter sent him from the mount-

It was delighted to hear that you were in so much better health and showed so much anxiety and sincere interest in my coming to see you, which I expect to do without fail on Saturday next. But I will object to be handled with the strength of a bear, as my ribs would not stand that kind of hugging—and I don't propose to have any of them even cracked, so you must not expect to try your powerful strength in that way on your obedient servant. Your kind promise to muss my collar un good Your kind promise to muss my collar up good is very gratifying, I can assure you, dear Jint, and I will most certainly give you all the opportunity you may wish to accomplish it.

On September 20 Lusk wrote as follows: If I don't hear from you at once I will either come to see you or send a police officer with full power to hunt you up and hold you till I come and take full charge of you. You should have been here last week to attend the county fair. It is said they paid premiums on good looks. I am sure you would have got a great big one from what you write about your health. On September 27, 1881, the following was written by Mr. Lusk:

HE WANTED ALL HER LOVE.

I will be there (the mountain resort at which I will be there (the mountain resort at which she was stopping) to morrow (Saturday) and you may expect full investigation about this fishing, and what you have been doing since you have been away. I am coming, coming, coming, and say to all the fellows to keep shady and save trouble, as I will want all your love and as many sweet kisses as you may have on hand to dispose of—and no fishing need apply.

* * * This is the last until I come and press you to my heart and make it glad, for it deserves some feast of kindness for its let troubles, that you were so indifferent in neglecting to write a word of comfort.

On November 13, 1881, Lunck wrote as fel. On November 13, 1881, Lusk wrote as fol-

Your kind note was kindly received last even-Your kind note was kindly received last evening, on my return from my local Mecca at Highspire. From the tone of your letter I presume you were none the worse of your experience at the door when on the watch the evening before, which I was glad to see, I can assure you. I was disappointed when I found the doorstep empty and dear Jint not about, as I promised myself a sweet chat and a delightful promenade on the banks of the beautiful Susquehanna by starlight with her. I expect Susquehanna by starlight with her. I expect to take a trip on Saturday morning, at 635, to Old Point Comfort. I am anxious to press you to my heart before leaving, in order that I may have Jint's heart pressed close and tight, so it may not start away in my absence.

Eighteenth ward, is the latest victim. He treats the matter as a joke, and says that he has nothing to fear, as he is as well behaved as the average citizen of Pittsburg.

In another letter Lusk expressed a wish to be a sparrow that he might fly to Miss Stoner and whisper sweet words in her ear.

A prominent banker testified that all the letters were in Lusk's handwriting. The hearing will be continued in Philadelphia on Saturday next.

ON THE NEW TRACTION ROAD.

The Cable Cars Will Prove Acceptable in

More Cases Than One. The new cable cars on the Butler street division of the Citizens' Traction road will be gladly welcomed for more reasons than that of rapid transportation. The present made an investigation. cars are dirty and the most uncomfortable imaginable. The company cannot be blamed very much for the condition of these cars, as it is almost a waste of money to repair them, for the new cars will be ready in a few days.

The cars are being shipped by the Pullmans as rapidly as possible. The grips are attached at the barns, and as soon as a sufficient number are ready for the road the horse cars will be abandoned.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

A Couple of Interesting Papers Rend at the Meeting Yesterday.

At the meeting of the Evangelical Ministerial Association yesterday an interesting paper on "Woman's Work" was read by Rev. W. H. McMillan. He said the weaker sex had been held as a necessary but meritless appendage to the stronger sex.

Dr. I. N. Havs, in a paper on "Temper-ance Campaign" advocated the division of the State into three districts, each division being in charge of seven representative men to help the temperance movement. A com-mittee was appointed to carry out the plan. Resolutions on the death of Rev. N. B.

THE NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT.

Aid in Having it Held Here. The Chamber of Commerce held r meeting yesterday afternoon. A number of resolutions were adopted, but, owing to the DISPATCH, it is impossible to give them in full. Chairman Dravo, of the Committee their eyes. on Rivers and Harbors, introduced a resolution directing that Colonel Merrill be asked the cause of the delay in the construction of the Herr's Island dam.

A communication was read from the Presi dent of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, asking that a committee of three be appointed to attend the dedication of their new building. President Schmertz and Messrs. Batchelor and Kelly were appointed.

The dedication occurs on January 30. A communication was read from the Grand Army Day Committee, of Allegheny county, asking that the Chamber of Commerce indorse an invitation to the G. A. R. to hold their annual encampment in this city in 1890, and assist in procuring the funds necessary to make the gathering a success. Fifty thousand dollars is the amount required to be pledged. The letter states that the meeting should be held here; first, for business reasons. It would bring much money and many visitors into the city. Second, for patriotic reasons. To this city belongs the honor of holding the first soldiers and sailors' convention, in 1866, from which convention sprung, to a great extent, the G. A. R. The many other advantages of holding the encampment in this city were also put forth in the communica-tion. It was referred to the Finance Com-

Mr. Rickertson reported a resolution asking Congress for a tariff of 2½ cents on tin plate. Hon, Morrison Foster made the amendment that it be made unlawful for any manufacturer to employ persons not citizens of the United States in the manufacture of such articles. The amendment was lost and the resolution adopted. Mr. Foster afterward explained that in his resolution he meant to exclude only such foreigners as never intended to become citizens of the United States.

QUAY WINS AGAIN.

His Lieutenants in the Americus Club Come Out Ahead in the Election-The Fight

Proves to be One-Sided. The result of the Americus Club election was a big surprise to even the "knowing ones." The contest was between certain representatives and friends of the municipal government and the power that is in State politics and claims Colonel Quay as its chieftain. The latter side won in an easy canter on the homestretch, taking all the stakes. The struggle was over the Executive Committee, and resulted in the election of Messrs. English, Roenigk, Gibbs, Rayburn, Reed and Barbour. Mr. English led the ticket, with Captain Reed a close second. The defeated candidates of the other side are F. Jahn, George L. Holliday, W. P. Bennett and H. H. Byram. To the uninitiated, by the way, a pousse consists in certain wines and liquors served in the same glass, but each separated from the other by its specific gravity, in such a way that a rainbow of liquors is made with the line between each pousse so sharply drawn that there is no suspicion of mixture. Books have been written on the enticing pousse, but heretofore no one has succeeded in pouring more than five layers of wines upon each other without trouble and mix-

Yesterday Eddie served the astonished New Yorkers with seven different colored liquors with blazing brandy on top, and if other barkeepers wish to follow his example the following is the formula:

First gently pour into a tall wineglass a little marischino, E. A. Poe's bibulous dream; then a little creme denint, the frenzied Frenchman's idol; then some approaching followed: cotine, followed by curacao, the Spaniard's delight; then yellow chatreuse, then green chatreuse, the aesthetic Englishman's loves, and finally pure brandy; ignite the latter and serve, as a whole, the seductive favorite of the universal American, a perfect pousse, and watch the fireworks that follow.
